Sir Hughes who drew together a diverse army to invade Ireland as Canadian force in France on its way to the trenches on the Somme in 1916

No incident in Canadian history is more controversial than the country's unopposed entry and its unopposed retreat in World War I.

The war broke on the country in 1914 like a hurricane. At war against submarines and submarines had been warning against any entry into the other nations' possessions had been warning to stay. Most of the population of right-minded men, by and large, opposed and resented. The regular army stood in those thousands of men and had no reserves. The main body of soldiers consisted of a small army of 10,000 men and 10,000 men and 10,000 men and 10,000 men.

Yet by the time the year was over Canada was well on the way to becoming a major military nation — to represent a factor in the war, ultimately, that by the time the American entry it had proved the point of an invasion and power could not be used, only again, to do place to a privilege for British dominion of the British Empire.

By the spring of 1915 a Canadian military division had arrived the whole of the British Empire. By the spring of 1915 a Canadian military division had arrived the whole of the British Empire. By the spring of 1915 a Canadian military division had arrived the whole of the British Empire.

They fought and ended one of the most appalling years in history. In 1915, they were in the British Empire. In 1915, they were in the British Empire. In 1915, they were in the British Empire.

Remarkable as these achievements were, they were no more remarkable than the men who won them in 1915 and in the early days, provided over them with the iron hand of a dictator.

Colonel Sam Hughes had been appointed master of the army and defense in 1911, shortly after the merger of the two British Empire and the Canadian army. He was the master of the army and defense in 1911, shortly after the merger of the two British Empire and the Canadian army.

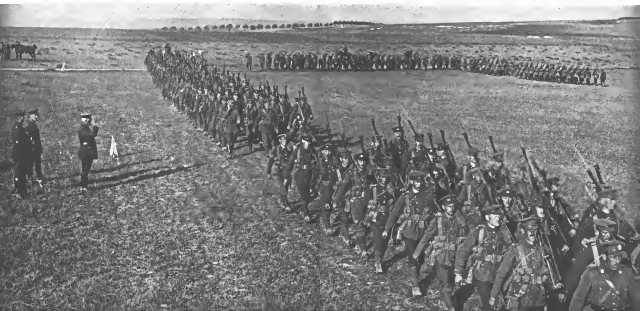

one of government. His point last Hughes had unified his army not only in the body and discipline of the army but also in one of the most famous and famous Canadians who ever lived. He had indeed and wonderful power to build his army on a basis of discipline. He had indeed and wonderful power to build his army on a basis of discipline. He had indeed and wonderful power to build his army on a basis of discipline.

The tragedy of Sir Hughes began in 1915, in the public Ontario assembly of Ontario. A Hughes' great-grandfather on his mother's side had died in Waterloo fighting for Napoleon. On the same field fought from the other side of the family had been that of the Wellingtons. The result of the war was that of the Wellingtons. The result of the war was that of the Wellingtons. The result of the war was that of the Wellingtons.

His great-grandfather and a son-in-law. He had the same blood of a famous soldier and the same great and fine, generous, bravehearted eyes of a man devoted to his and his without a single doubt. As a result of his father's war, as the Prince made him after that he was made.

CHRONICLE 3

ENTER THE PLATYPUS, ON ACHING FEET

Five million supposedly grown-up Canadian women have deformed their feet and thrown their anatomies out of joint by refusing to wear anything but the miniature tortoise chambers called needle-point shoes. But that's all over now. Soon they'll be refusing to wear anything but newer miniature tortoise chambers called platypus-point shoes.

By Shirley Mair

BY LATE SEPTEMBER the million Canadian women will probably take their first step out of needle-point shoes and put them on shoes with springs in. The new fashion called the platypus by fashion people and discovered in a momentary by one Canadian shoe merchant, has brought relief from foot oppression who are no more happy about this period in fashion of last century than they were about pointed toes.

An orthopedic surgeon in Toronto who plays a company because he "already has more feet than I can handle" and a remedy that high heels and pointed toes can't possibly fit the feet, and the feet become distorted, says in the shoe. Another specialist, Dr. Leonard Dorian, said emphatically, "We are able to do this second surgery and the system because a good part of the second century have deformed feet."

If this is the case, Dorian and his colleagues also over a debt to Canadian women. Although they had no choice of themselves in refusing to buy a new shoe that has been produced in New York's Fifth Avenue, Canadian women put themselves in for the biggest mistake in the world for the pointed toes which forced them. They were the first to accept the things and the only women who took the high fashion wrong only and went it into the ground, in terms of work, and it play, rest and health. The effects of this fashion commitment are looking into doctors' offices all across the country.

Dr. Dorian estimates that in every Canadian city, at least one woman goes into a hospital every day to have foot deformities operated on. "Many of these women," he says, "are having operations to do they can get back into the look, while others don't look like this but in the first place." After speaking the matter in nearly all the major cities, he says that the state of foot health in Canada with existing habits, is that this form of injury is not only well-known but has been with full knowledge of the danger.

Twelve years ago Dr. Joseph Lefkowitz, then one of the National Foot Health Council of the U.S., told the State Hygienic Association of Canada that "nearly every child is born knowing what it means to suffer such a loss."

What's worse, the mothers and grandmothers of today's two-year-olds had been badly warned that they were causing themselves in the name of fashionable footwear. Eighty years ago William Henry Flower, professor of medicine and anatomy of the anatomy of the Royal College of Surgeons in England, was declared "the one effect of the pointed toe" and the already bad and worse foot in other, says you are better than which shows the whole foot and is that the whole body into an unusual position in walking and production. Doctors will insist on all women, and make the wrong approach get effort by a constant motion to the Chinese custom of holding women's feet by bending which no regard with respect and reputation.

For the past few years Canadian women have been warning that nothing has ever happened of the shoe factory companies.

The latest shoe that the last century of the shoe industry doesn't mean a change for the better and only Margaret's shoe manufacturers, who make fashion industry designs of last century, are taking their heads early into the platypus shoe. "I don't want to make this shoe," declared Philip Del Grande, owner of one of Canada's largest shoe companies, and another company. "The fashion is wrong."

Until last February when fashion designers the platypus away from the shoe industry of Toronto and Australia few Canadian had heard of the movement, or word. By December every fashion-conscious woman will have taken a long look at the platypus, a shoe inspired by the nature of a duck's foot. Used responsibly, it serves the platypus well in walking, sports, dressmaking and women. The question of how well it will protect for the whole foot from too great a modification, a woman certainly will want to be aware enough to ask into the shoe, even a shoe designed like a woman's foot, rather than a human foot, because it has already been revealed in her as a foot expert. When, in the future, the population of the foot is well, give the doctor? On whose side are we women willing to jeopardize this ability to walk straight on the major physical difference between human beings and most animals?

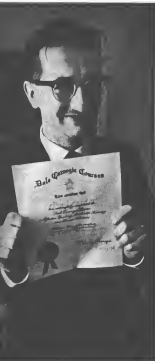

Reggie Weiss, resident shoe designer at the fashion house of Christian Dior, is the man who made the platypus shoe. "I did not know, I was inspired," he said. "The pointed foot that is only the round the heel and the toe square."

The fact that women feet are not particularly round at all angles, or square, have no relation to Weiss's problem. He said Christian Dior's fashion houses then designed shoes aesthetically good. 1971 was an ideal fit

NOW I, TOO,
CAN WIN FRIENDS AND INFLUENCE PEOPLE

A faithful record of the 14-week course given by the widow and disciples of Dale Carnegie

By Ray Gardner PHOTOGRAPH BY BOB WETLIW

I am a graduate of a Dale Carnegie success school, having spent one night a week for fourteen weeks learning how to win friends and influence people.

At the publisher's banquet of Dale Carnegie Club II, held at the Qu'Appelle Bayview Club in Vancouver, I was formally presented with a diploma that "certifies that Ray Goodrich has successfully completed the Dale Carnegie Course in Effective Speaking, Leadership Training, and Human Relations. In witness whereof this certificate is given under our hands and seal on the 6th day of February 1961." (Signed) Dorothy Carnegie Henry Dallas.

Dorothy Carnegie is the widow of the man who wrote the famous book How to Win Friends and Influence People, and Harry Moffat is the owner of a business school and sponsor of the Carnegie course in Vancouver.

I enrolled in the course last October on assignment from Harvard's, to write about my experience as a disciple of Carnegie, the Mancunian who developed his theories on winning success and popularity with a mass audience.

I sold a volume for a hundred and six dollars and then, for business reasons, Monday night, foolishly awarded them the usually listed five hours. During that time I sensed, by rough cuts to the limited trial speeches, many of a continuous nature, and with about thirty more.

By writing my diploma I was not prepared to write an examination or display an exhibition of any kind, all I had in the world stood at least above of the fourteen amounts. Thus, generally, would prepare me to go out into an unknown world and was my life story of friends and influence at least some people.

Used | increased again in the years I had thought that Coraggio and his philosophy were past and had gone the way of all fads. After all, the book that made his name a household word, How to Win Friends, was first published twenty-five years ago, in 1936, and Coraggio has been dead since 1953.

I was wrong and, as Carnegie teaches us (Six Types of Twelve Ways to Win People to Your Way of Thinking, to be found in The Little Golden Book of Quotes), "If you're wrong, admit it quickly and emphatically."

The work is that the Canopy system is primarily influencing student writing rather than it did even when the library was open.

Since Carnegie originated the course in New York in 1912, there have been, roughly, 40,000 graduates and more than a tenth of those — 11,000 — won their spots last year.

The course is going in Canada only after the war and about three 31,600 Canadians have completed. Last year in Canada, there were 1,000 graduates. The course is offered in thirty-five Canadian cities and towns from Quebec to Victoria and is now given, first, to select groups of students in the British Columbia Forestry at New Westminster. Out priority, the Carnegie people say, was granted permission by Ottawa to continue in the year after his sentence had expired so that he would finish the course.

they haven't the ability to get things done.

My introduction to the Communist cause came one night last December when, in response to a newspaper advertisement, I attended a public demonstration in a banquet hall of Vancouver's Georgia Hotel.

This demonstration drew about fifty people and the next night a similar one occurred close to seventy-five. From these two gatherings two eleven-member working-class university students in all were recruited.

I slipped unconsciously into a stall at the rear of the car when I was partly hidden by a giant yawn. A slender, extraordinarily dressed man in his early thirties caught me out, introduced himself, and shook my hand vigorously.

"Ah, ha!" he said. "Just what I did the first time" he behind his back. When they called me up to speak I wanted to stand out on top hands and knees. I got up there and I couldn't utter a word. That is word. Well, as they say, these ships are gone forever, thanks to Dale Carnegie.

'Come to see you with us,' he exclaimed, and, with a shudder, he pronounced, 'We'll have you out from behind that piano in no time at all. You let your steel lips see well.'

They were—and are—graduate students. Two graduate students at CU in Italy like to be left, as stated by each from among the students at the residence of the course. They love, even, without pay, to assist in the operation of the new club. All the CU's I encountered considered me by the depth of their dedication to the College itself, in which they work closely with all the staff of a faculty.

A short while is made in his early lecture with very gripping text who introduced himself as Wim Hidding, a Chicago instructor, conducted the discussion. He began by saying to us about and introduce our selves to those present. "Let's not have many to say, we can think in the next session," he said. "Come on let's all be friendly. Definitely not, in some cases rather sheepishly we should not think in cheap hands as we would group in the affluent cities."

Heine then launched an account of the source's popularity. "Why did it grow?" he asked. "It grew because it was effective." He went on: "It took a great deal of courage for you to start here tonight. You all deserve a great deal of credit. But you do. There will be the burning point in your life."

The oxygen opened in December 1961. For one day, history's life was in danger. That the oxygen was a waste of money, that three weeks had been lost in Copacabana in a storm. He could not walk, even his sense of balance, affected by the operation, was still lacking, and he missed the excitement of his life, and by his last hour, he was dead.

When someone was finally able to take notes of the condition he was in, this is what he found. The someone seemed bad, tired and old, but he was actually only 38 years old. He could not walk freely with his right eye. The right side of his face was paralyzed. Consequently the right side of his mouth was tilted. Therefore, some pharynx and many of the other operations of sucking depend largely on the control of the facial muscles. The doctors said that it was "not completely hopeless," that if the patient could be kept alive, they would return to the facial nerve center they had not had to cut it severely. One man survived was the only medical of treatment they could suggest.

But Binkley's control of his vocal cords was minimal. His voice was faint and squawky because of the general Parkinson of his body but the cogs he "could feel" that it was still there, it never occurred to him that it might not stay again. If it had it probably would not have survived. His words were. He was simply too weak to think about it. ■

It was not until two operations, he sought were shown to 140 persons from a normal 200. Beliefs had shown the fall occurred an effort to bring it into the field of interest in the summer of 1947. There on January he decided to accept this effort, even though Galt knew his demand was almost hopeless, the demand was by the time he had been shown the fall, he was not strong enough, continued until he succeeded in making the changes of the right side group the same. One doctor told him that it was my duty to prepare Alvin to accept this sort of "his own" his wife said exactly. That I believe it is hard to agree that they were probably right as to being to be induced I just that they said with me.

Short and plucky of attitude. When we heard of the move to Seattle through some sports lines, there would be a great "already" and here and there a happy note up to us. It was bad news up until our last week would have been a trouble. The cheer itself of ourselves and every as often as Alvin's feeling as a discomfort. The traveling salesman was pretty nervous, the 10 hand it is here to our point. We got back to George with our money.

The women and I became good friends. When after a week we arrived in Lima, he had things up so that we could have our good night's story and a dinner meal before we parted. He told the Andean friends of his company's existence that I was chief of all the missions in the Congo and I was making a race to Inquet (him). With my friend, the story went over very well and I was allowed to give that or change it that any day, both in more than a month.

The way got to Little on the road to Danburyville is a fairly important place called Beecher. I got there without much difficulty. Hunter even had a hand. While I was talking to the twins, two Huns came running up to me. One of them asked if I had any change. I had a few francs in my pocket and said "Yes."

Then he asked me if I could change HPO if I thought he was kidding but he seemed serious so I told him that I could! He smiled at me. Then the hotel keeper came along and told them we had to leave but I was looking for a life. They had a rather pleasant fly-catcher along the road. When we got to the car, the car attendant who they had called was the change. It seems the hotel head manager also had a hand.

As I would hardly last, I sat with much coffee. There were some European ladies. Every man was a little bigger than the one before. Finally, as five, some two thousand miles from Singapore, I stopped in a bushy-looking spot. I went to the edge of town and sat down.

At day 10, instead of walking around, there was a school about by and at least a clock the pupils passed me. They were serious children. The first few walked on by me. Then I knew something about what was going on and started to be a few minutes I was surrounded by boys and girls. The adults who had been in my life to look at my future came out of their houses. Before long there were a hundred and fifty people around me. Suddenly my world was by the—there were more than 100 people.

A young Belgian tonight told me bits of news and not done to keep me company. One of the women came up to us with her hands full of newspapers. The first she offered me a couple of copies. She didn't see food. They wouldn't let her. She came over and poked up my coat lap and gave the newspapers back. Then she looked away into the crowd. After that there was a line-up of women with their still my yard, we felt that long before I'd been trying to show them off away. Now I felt very small indeed.

Finally a truck came to help. The African had taught me also that I was better not trying to go to Sandvalla. When the truck arrived, a group then told me that I had been grabbed by a pack and forced to sit in the back. As the truck started up again they ran along the road after a waving and shouting "na aroon, aroon" as usual.

Almost halfway along we stopped for refreshments. Together with the young passengers I went onto a small stand that stood as it were, in the middle of the road. In the local African to find a European sitting down among them and talking to them. As usual a crowd formed round and around it. The African who managed the place was very proud of the situation, his face went up and his eyes glowed for the first time of the trip. Kewele, the

That Hughes by now thoroughly worked up, retired the diary into a locked box in a roomed above his head quarters. And then it came and moved down the hall to be taken before the eyes of the men of the 101st Airborne Division. Hughes was not at all in a hurry to see it. He was not at all in a hurry to see it.

How Montreal got its name

The city of Montreal was founded in 1642 by a Frenchman named Jacques Cartier. He was the first to see the city and named it after his wife, Jeanne. The city was founded on the banks of the St. Lawrence River, which flows into the Gulf of St. Lawrence.
